

The Carsan Chronicle

NAILS / NOTES / NIGHT LIFE

WELCOME TO THE CARSAN CHRONICLE

This is my weekly update newspaper. Consider it my creative outlet, a place for me to create rather than just consume, while still keeping up with the digital, and always trending world we live in. Each edition will be updated, perfected, and published weekly, with Sunday being the goal. Most likely in the late afternoon rather than the morning. Inside, you can expect a weekly recap of what I've been doing, wearing, eating, thinking, and anything else that seems worthy of reporting. There will be stories, pictures, opinions, recommendations. Welcome to The Carsan Chronicle. I hope you enjoy reading it as much as I enjoy making it.

HONORABLE MENTION IS HAVING LUNCH WITH LANDON ON THURSDAY

EVE ENO'S 22ND BIRTHDAY WEEK

THIS WEEKS HEADLINES

- THE COACH COLLECTION
- MANICURE MISHAP
- WORST POSSIBLE TIME
- FALL FRIDAY
- ACADEMIC WEAPON

The Lifestyle & Style

THE BIRTHDAY DECOR

When it came to Eve's 22nd birthday, the color palette was carefully considered. Pink was selected. Then, after further consideration, pink was selected again. Crowns and bows became the stars of the decor, while a hand-painted banner by Stacy Klein was carefully hung to officially establish the birthday headquarters. Strings, streamers, and balloons filled in the remaining space, creating what can only be described as a very pink situation. And honestly? It worked.

NEXT WEEKS HAIR STYLE

Plans have been made. Next Saturday's Madison night out has already created a very important question: What are we doing with our hair? Eve and I are considering getting professional blowouts before heading to Madison, which means there is now a very limited window to find a salon, compare prices, and make an appointment. Research begins early this week. The hair must be blown out.

MANICURE MISHAP?

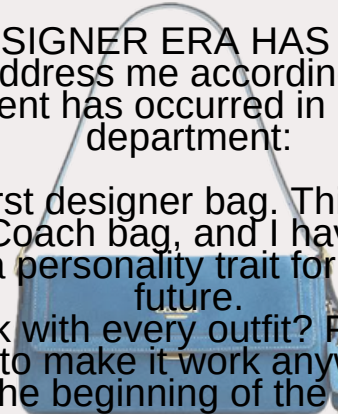

In a rare moment of bravery, I decided to step outside my usual nail routine and try zebra-print French tips. The nail tech assured me they would be easy. The finished product? Let's just say they required a period of adjustment. For the first few days, I remained unconvinced. They weren't exactly what I had pictured, and the idea of asking for a redo definitely crossed my mind. But somewhere between day one and day three, something unexpected happened: I started to like them. Are they perfect? Absolutely not. Are they growing on me? Yes. Final verdict: The zebra has been accepted.

The Coach Collection

A DESIGNER ERA HAS BEGUN
Please address me accordingly. A major development has occurred in my wardrobe department:

I bought my first designer bag. This new addition is a blue suede Coach bag, and I have every intention of making it a personality trait for the foreseeable future.

Will it work with every outfit? Probably not. Will I attempt to make it work anyway? Absolutely. Consider this the beginning of the designer bag era.

OUTFIT OF THE WEEK

The competition was over before it started.

There was really no need for a formal selection process this week.

The title of Outfit of the Week goes to Eve's Thursday birthday look: a sparkly sequin mini dress with lace detailing along the top and bottom that quite literally sparkled all night long.

The dress was a SHEIN find, but after this performance, purchasing it in additional colors may be necessary, espically to have a matching moment. Some outfits are worn once. This one has officially earned repeat status.

The Social Scene

FALL FRIDAY

Friday was officially dedicated to fall activities. Eve and I started the afternoon at an apple orchard/ winery in Elkhorn, where we quickly discovered that, unfortunately, taking pictures by the actual apple trees was not an option. Luckily, the mini apple cider donuts made up for it. They were easily a 10/10. When we realized the orchard also wasn't a place to enjoy a glass of wine onsite, we decided to take the fall fun to The Fuzzy Pig in Whitewater. I went with an apple wine, Eve chose cherry, and we split a margarita pizza. By the time we finished, the rain had finally stopped, so we were able to get take pictures. We even got a little behind the scenes moment when the pizza master offered us a private tour of where all the pizzas are made. A successful fall afternoon.

WORST POSSIBLE TIME

The Unexpected Apartment Tour

Friday afternoon, Eve and I had just gotten out of the shower when a pounding knock on our door interrupted the peace. We opened it to find a DLK worker standing there with two female students who were apparently there to tour our apartment. And unfortunately, they had picked the worst possible time. The apartment was still in full post-party recovery mode. There were clothes everywhere, empty bottles, food, random stuff scattered around. The unexpected tour gave these girls a very authentic look at our college apartment life. While it definitely wasn't the ideal time for an apartment showing, it's safe to say the interaction will be a memorable one for everyone involved.

A DEVIL OF A HIKE

Saturday, Conner and I decided to take on Devil's Lake's Balance Rock Trail. What we didn't realize when we started was that we had picked the hardest trail. As we made our way up, we overheard other hikers talking about how difficult it was which was great information to receive after we had already committed. And, because apparently the universe wanted to make things even more challenging, the trail was insanely busy. The hike was worth it, though. At the top, we came across something neither of us expected to see: two men tightrope walking above the rocks. Not exactly the usual hiking scenery, but definitely a memorable way to end the climb.

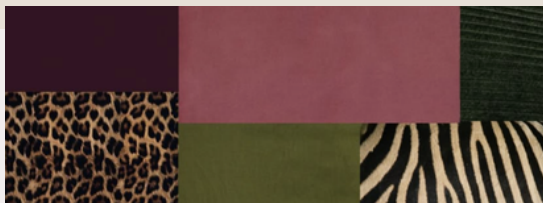

The Editor Notes

FEELING FALL

Fall has definitely been on my mind recently. Instead of mourning the fact that it's getting darker earlier and colder by the day, I've decided to fully embrace it. One part of fall I'm especially loving right now is the colors specifically burgundy, browns, and all the deeper tones that come with the season. I'm also loving fall fashion right now. Animal print is having a moment, and I'm very excited to finally break out my brown Levi's jacket. Outside of fashion, I've been fully leaning into the fall activities. I've been happily shopping for my Halloween costumes, although those will have to remain a secret for now. Costume reveals coming in a later edition. And lately, I've been thinking that a fall trip to NYC would be very enjoyable. The changing leaves, fall outfits, and city in October? Sounds pretty perfect to me, I'm definitely missing my trip from August.

Academic Weapon

I spent the past week really locking in. Between studying for my Audit and Individual Tax exams, the goal was simple: study hard now, party harder later. Thankfully, the work paid off. I got a 90% on my Audit exam, which feels even better knowing I spent the entire week preparing for it. Still waiting on my Individual Tax score, but for now, I'm celebrating the 90%.

THIS WEEKS INs & OUTs

IN

- Zebra print
- Hugo spritz
- Party maxing
- Apple wine
- Hiking

OUT

- Going 0-2 in pickleball
- Tightrope walking
- Stomach issues

This week I decided to finally make my very own Hugo Spritz!

Recipe:

- A few mint leaves -make sure to slap them to activate
 - 1 shot of St Germain
 - A Geneours pour of prosecco - I used champagne because that's all I had
 - Top off with club soday
- And of course make this in a cute glass

my vision board is my Reality